THE DRED SCOTT CASE—LETTER FROM SCOTT'S COUNSEL.

To the Editors of the National Intelligencer:

GENTLEMEN: From an imperfect knowledge of the circumstances attending the suit for freedom before the Supreme Court, prosecuted by Dred Scott, (a negro,) several correspondents of the New-York press have made suggestions tending to mislead public opinion. One insinuates that the suit was a contrivance to create a case for political effect; by bringing it under the review and judgment of the Supreme Court the questions which have so stirred the public mind since the repeal of the Missouri Compromise.

Another surmises that selfish motives influenced certain distinguished members of the bar in declining the request to lend me their assistance in behalf of my client's causes; and a third seems to suspect my own in regard to conducting it alone. As the peculiar attitude of political affairs at this moment gives much interest to the case, I will be pardoned for giving a brief narrative of it, and especially as the simplest statement of the facts will vindicate the gentlemen whose motives have been impugned for unwillingness to appear in the cause, and at the same time vindicate the cause itself from the imputation of having been brought to subserve a party purpose.

The case is a suit for the freedom of the plaintiff, Dred Scott, and of his wife and two children. In 1834 Dred was taken by his former master, Dr. Emerson, a surgeon in the army, to reside at the military post at Rock Island, in the state of Illinois, and afterwards, in 1836, to reside at Fort Snelling, on the other side of the Mississippi River, in that part of Louisiana Territory north of 36° 30'. Harriet was taken to Fort Snelling in 1836, and was there married to Dred. Their eldest child, Eliza, was born north of 36° 30', on a boat, whilst descending the Mississippi River. The other child, Lizzie, was born at Jefferson Barracks, after they were taken to Missouri, in 1838.

This suit was first brought by the administratrix of Dr. Emerson, in the Circuit Court of St. Louis County, in the State of Missouri, and that Court, following the uniform decisions on such facts of the Courts of Missouri ever since it was an organized Territory, gave judgment for the plaintiff. An appeal was, however, prosecuted, and a majority of the Supreme Court of the State, at the March term of 1852, reversed the judgment of the Circuit Court, because "the times now are not as they were when the former decisions on this subject were made. Since then, not only individuals, but States, have been possessed with a dark and fell spirit in relation to Slavery, whose gratification is sought in the pursuit of measures whose inevitable consequence must be the overthrow and destruction of our Government. Under such circumstances it does not behoove the State of Missouri to show the least countenance to any measures which might countenance this spirit."

When the case was remanded under this opinion the plaintiff's attorney dismissed the suit in the State Court, and Major Sanford, a citizen of New-York, having in the mean time, purchased Dred and his family, an action for trespass for false imprisonment was brought against Sanford in the Circuit Court of the United States on the 2d of November, 1853, by Dred Scott, as a "citizen" of Missouri.

The defendant denied the jurisdiction of the Court, on the ground that Dred was a negro, and therefore not a "citizen." But the Circuit Court held that he was a citizen, if free, within the meaning of that section of the Constitution which provides for the maintenance of suits in Courts of the United States between citizens of different States. The defendant then denied that Dred and his family were free, and on the 15th of May, 1854, the Court decided that they were slaves, because the Supreme Court of the State had so decided on the same facts. From this judgment Dred appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States in the December term of 1854.

I was in California when the record of this case was filed in the Supreme Court. The efforts made to obtain counsel for the plaintiff prior to my return had not met with success. On my return I received a letter from Mr. Field, (who is a distinguished lawyer in Missouri, and one who never during the fifteen years I have known him, manifested any interest in politics,) requesting me to present the case to the court.

In Missouri, and severally, I believe, in the Southern States, almost every lawyer feels bound to give his services when asked in such a case arising in the community to which he belongs. Having risen at that bar, considering myself still a citizen of Missouri, although for the present pursuing my profession at the seat of government, I did not hesitate to become the counsel for the plaintiff here, as I should have done there.

As I perceived that the cause involved important issues, which might possibly be engulphed in the great political controversy then just emerging in relation to the power of Congress over the territory of the United States, I felt it my duty to seek assistance, especially as when I found arrayed against me the Senator from Missouri, (Mr. Geyer,) and the late Attorney-General, (Mr. Johnson,) among the first men of the profession of the East and West. I sought to obtain the support of one of the ablest men at the bar in the South, and he had almost consented to yield it. His inclination was surrendered, not, I well know, from the selfish motive given in the press. I then applied to leading members of the profession in the North, and with the same result.

The mercenary motives imputed for the reluctance shown to engage in it is equally unjust to all. The truth is, while some gave it up because their previous engagements interrupted, and others because the late application did not give time to make preparation, all perceived that from the nature of the case it must assume an aspect more or less affecting the party struggles impending, and were unwilling on all accounts to add to this embarrassment of the cause or that of the party with which they stood connected, by implicating either themselves or it by their action in the result. While I do myself deprecate the state of things which brings political and a partisan influence to act upon the public mind in connection with this case, and while willing to avoid it as much as possible, I yet felt it was my duty to call to its support all the aid I could command. What I most feared the result would be, in not having prevailed in getting an opponent to the cause, and I repeated the expression of my solicitude on opening the argument, in person, to meet any such opponent to acknowledge his good effect in enlisting the great ability and learning of Mr. Curtis, of Boston, to maintain the constitutionality of the power exercised by Congress, on which the freedom of my client depends.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

M. BLAIR.

Affairs in Washington and New-Orleans.

New-Orleans, Wednesday, Dec. 24.

The news from New-York concerning Walker's attempts in Nicaragua creates much excitement here. Walker's agents are very active, and it is said that the steamer which sails for San Juan, to-morrow, will take a large number of recruits.

General Henningsen, of the Nicaraguan army, publishes a card, in which he denies the truth of Dan Sickles's statements published in the New-York papers. He says that Domingo never applied for a situation in the army at Virginia, but an appointment was tendered to him which he declined.

It is said that General Walker will shortly publish himself.

The Difference between Mr. T. F. Meagher and Lieutenant-Governor Raymond—Correspondence.

A. W. CLASON, ESQ., TO W. M. EVARTS, ESQ.

New-York, Friday, Dec. 26, 1856.

DEAR SIR: Insinuations injurious to Mr. Raymond having been publicly made upon incorrect information, as to the correspondence between him and Mr. Meagher, he had better give publicity to the letters which passed, although on the complete adjustment of the difference, we agreed that their publication was unnecessary. Very truly yours,

W. M. EVARTS, Esq. A. W. CLASON.

MR. EVARTS TO MR. RAYMOND.

New-York, Friday, Dec. 26, 1856.

DEAR SIR: I regret that any circumstances should require a presentation to the public of the course of the amicable adjustment of the difference lately existing between yourself and Mr. Meagher.

I agree, however, with Mr. Clason, that you should not be exposed to the injurious imputations which ignorance or malice may not scruple to throw out, when a simple publication of the correspondence would effectually put an end to them.

We place, therefore, the whole correspondence at your disposal. Yours, very truly,

Hon. H. J. Raymond. WM. M. EVARTS.

MR. MEAGHER TO MR. RAYMOND.

Irish News Office, No. 29 Ann-street, Nov. 28, 1856.

SIR: I enclose an article which appeared in the New-York Daily Times of this morning. I notice an expression in it which I have underlined.

You will gratify me by stating whether by that observation you mean to charge that I, at any time broke my parole.

A direct answer will oblige your obedient servant,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER.

Lieutenant-Governor Raymond, Editor of the New-York Daily Times.

MR. RAYMOND'S REPLY.

New-York, Friday, Nov. 28, 1856.

SIR: In reply to your note, which has just been handed to me by Mr. Clason, I have merely to say, that, as the expression you have underscored, in the paragraph cut from the Daily Times, speaks only of your being able to "run away without breaking your parole," I am unable to see how it affords any ground whatever for the question you ask.

I am, your obedient servant,

HENRY J. RAYMOND.

T. F. Meagher, Esq.

MR. A. W. CLASON TO MR. RAYMOND.

Friday, Nov. 28, 1856.

DEAR SIR: I have called twice to see you since we parted.

Mr. Meagher requests me to return your letter to him received through me. I inclose it. That letter is rejected by Mr. Meagher as an answer. Therefore, I occupy the position I did this morning on handing you his note.

I beg an early answer to the letter I had the honor of bearing. Most respectfully,

Your ob't serv't,

A. W. CLASON.

H. J. Raymond, Esq.

MR. RAYMOND TO MR. CLASON.

New-York, Saturday, Nov. 29, 1856.

DEAR SIR: Your note of yesterday, with its inclosure, was handed to me this morning.

Mr. Meagher had asked whether an expression which he quoted from the Daily Times, was intended to charge him with having broken his parole. In reply I directed his attention to the fact that the language quoted expressly excludes the idea of his having done so.

Until I am favored with some reason for Mr. Meagher's "application" of this sentence, I must decline giving him any other.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

HENRY J. RAYMOND.

A. W. Clason, Esq.

MR. MEAGHER TO MR. RAYMOND.

Saturday, Nov. 29, 1856.

DEAR SIR: Your note bearing date Nov. 28, did not reach me until late last evening.

My letter to Mr. Raymond was not designed to "exclude the right of inquiry" into the meaning of the expressions to which he had taken exception—but rather to express my own decided conviction that its terms were so explicit as to leave no room for such inquiry.

I assumed that the language employed was the best evidence of the intent with which I had employed it. and that it indicated clearly enough—what was the fact—that I did not intend by its use to charge Mr. Meagher with having broken his parole. I did not intend then to express any opinion whatever on the subject, nor do I intend to do so now.

You are at liberty, if you see fit, to present this note to Mr. Meagher; and he is at liberty to consider it a reply to his letter and to publish it in the Times or elsewhere, at his discretion.

Your obedient servant, HENRY J. RAYMOND.

At the time of the above, Mr. Meagher was out of town. When he returned, in pursuance of a suggestion from Mr. Clason that the communication should be made direct to Mr. Meagher, the following note was sent:

MR. RAYMOND TO MR. MEAGHER.

New-York, Dec. 4, 1856.

SIR: Referring to your note of Nov. 28, I can say with pleasure that I did not intend by the expression you quote to charge that you had at any time broken your parole. The language of the article does not seem to me to import any opinion on that subject; it certainly was not intended to express any such opinion.

Your obedient servant,

T. F. Meagher, Esq. H. J. RAYMOND.

NICARAGUAN AFFAIRS.

General Cazneau and Mr. John McKeon—Interesting Correspondence.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Mr. District-Attorney McKeon having led the way in publishing our correspondence, I avail myself of this official precedent to offer the press my reply to his letter, and to correct a few of his remarks.—I will not say willful—misapprehensions.

There need be no mistake—for there certainly is no mystery—in my position or proceedings with reference to Nicaragua, and any assumption that there is, arises here from ignorance than from a desire to find an excuse for persecution.

Nicaragua is rich in a vast extent of public domain of incomparable beauty and fertility, which is open to the whole world by a liberal plan of colonization. She proposes to bestow on actual settlers free homesteads with transportation to them at her own expense. Feeling a deep interest in the progress and development of this American State, I proffered my humble services in aid of this munificent system of colonization, which, as may be seen by its provisions, combines many peculiar and inviting features.

First—That not less than fifty families are to be settled in one compact neighborhood.

Second—The sites of these settlements are selected in the most favorable locations for health, productiveness, internal trade and external communication.

Third—That homesteads of eighty (80) acres are given in fee to actual settlers in these chosen locations, and a free passage thereto supplied at the expense of the State of Nicaragua.

This line of settlements, stretching in continuous communication along the transit route, and guarding the navigable waters of the State, would be the best guarantee for its domestic peace and prosperity, as well as the surest means of advancing American interests on the Isthmus. Each settlement will be strong enough to protect itself in ordinary contingencies, and all are to be placed at carefully-selected and naturally communicating points; those, therefore, who are best acquainted with the true state of affairs in Nicaragua have no fears for their safety and general success. Several hundred persons had engaged to go out in the Tennessee, and take homesteads in these colonies, and my object in addressing the District-Attorney was to learn in what way this class of emigrants could be protected from serious injury to their prospects, by being arrested as filibusters. I desired, on their account, to know whether some evidence of an attempt at illegal action would be required, or whether they could be arrested and prevented of their passage on any shadowy "suspicion of an intention" to enter Walker's army, if, on their arrival in Nicaragua, they should happen to find the Americans there in deadly peril, and be disposed to strike one brave blow for their rescue.

Mr. McKeon declined answering these points and favored me instead with a chapter on diplomatic considerations which has as little to do with the subject of American rights—probably much less in fact—than the treaty now before the Senate, for that may be aptly styled a treaty to extinguish the Monroe doctrine for the benefit of England.

It is universally believed that certain high officials, in their unrelenting hostility to American progress on the Isthmus, expected and desired to see our friends there "crushed out," that is, butchered to the last man by their foreign enemies; and it is not to be doubted that the most stringent orders were sent from Washington not to allow succor to reach them from this quarter. It was thought by many that Walker must fall,—and with him all the Americans on the Isthmus would be exterminated, without distinction of age or sex,—if he failed to receive aid in men, munitions and provisions, by the end of December.

By using a strict vigilance and a convenient latitude in rendering the neutrality laws, it was easy to make this relief impossible, and measures were taken accordingly. The friends of Nicaragua did not think Gen. Walker's position so critical, and bounded their efforts to sending out clothing and provisions for the sick, wounded and helpless, including women and children, and not excluding the wounded and suffering of the enemy.

But, up to this moment, the question remains unanswered whether lawful emigrants would not be subject to arrest and detention at the pleasure of any one who might choose to suspect them of filibustering intentions.

Mr. McKeon talked in general terms of not permitting a violation of the neutrality laws, but could not be brought to define what act or movement constitutes this violation. He assumed that every emigrant to Nicaragua must necessarily and inevitably go with filibustering intentions. He professed to know better than themselves, that of the thousands of industrious men whom our severe Winters leave homeless and unemployed, none can be found who will accept a fine farm in a mild and fruitful climate, with a free passage to it, from the generous Government of Nicaragua.

Starting on his own assumption, that the poorest man here would scorn the gift of an independent homestead, he infers that the colonists who had engaged passage by the Tennessee, must all be open to the "suspicion of an intention" to violate the Neutrality laws, and therefore all be liable to arrest and imprisonment.

Acting on this principle, Mr. McKeon, in the private interview at his office, operated upon the fears of Mr. Morgan for the safety of his through line to California, and extracted from him, in my presence, a promise that none of the persons under colonies engagements should have a passage in the Tennessee, and all of them were cast adrift, to their great disappointment, and in many cases serious loss. Some hundred citizens were thus invaded in their rights, and Mr. Morgan was compelled to recede from his engagements with the Government of Nicaragua, at the hazard of his charter, on the bare "suspicion of wrong intentions." If he had permitted it, failing these pretexts, the steamer might have been engaged, as the Northern Light was on the same day, under the supposition that her destination might be to favor the desertion of Walker and his band.

Costa Rica, Guatemala and San Salvador—all of them red with the innocent blood of our murdered countrymen—may be lawfully supplied with men and arms to complete their wholesale plan of massacre, but we are forbidden to go to the rescue of our countrymen.

Will might Henry Clay declare that our neutrality laws were framed for the especial service of the foes of freedom, and well may the gallant Quitman battle for their repeal. Very respectfully yours,

WM. L. CAZNEAU.

GEN. CAZNEAU TO MR. MCKEON.

New-York, Friday, Dec. 26, 1856.

SIR: I regret to observe that your note of the 24th inst. in no form answers the inquiries I was constrained to address you in my note of the same date, respecting the execution of the Neutrality laws.

I asked no such superfluous question as whether Don Fermin Ferrer has been officially recognized at Washington, since it is well understood that England has not yet consented that our Government should accredit an American line of policy in Central American affairs, and no one expects Mr. Marcy to act without it. It is about as generally understood that Senor Ferrer has not yet asked for recognition, and I was also perfectly aware that it did not fall within the range of your duties to decide that question. Neither did I solicit your opinion as to the value or validity of the colonization contract, which I respectfully submitted to your consideration.

I only desired to know, in my capacity of American citizen, and for the benefit of numerous of other American citizens, to whom it is of vital importance to know the fact, "whether persons going out under that contract would be liable, by the latest construction of the neutrality laws, to arrest and imprisonment here upon a suspicion of an intention to violate the neutrality laws in another country and jurisdiction."

Don Fermin Ferrer's name was simply offered as an evidence of the existence and character of the contract, not supposing the circumstance of his not having sought or received official recognition at Washington, had annihilated his being as a man, or his identity as the selected representative of Nicaragua. I called upon him as an accessible and credible witness of the existence of the contract, and with no expectation of exposing his name to the skillful discourtesy to which it has been subjected.

I distinctly stated that I had "no power, instruction, or intention to raise men for military service, or to send out any other class of emigrants than those persons disposed to accept farms upon the sole condition of cultivating them, as good and orderly citizens." But as these thoughts have been made criminal, subject to arrest and imprisonment in former enforcements of our elastic neutrality laws, I was anxious to learn whether this construction was still in force. This is not a needless or unimportant question since our citizens have been arrested, steamers detained at heavy loss, and vast commercial interests damaged on foreign suggestion, and on such frivolous pretexts of suspected intentions, that our authorities never found it expedient to bring the arrested to trial. With these antecedents before us, it is necessary to guard such of our citizens as may be disposed to emigrate from a repetition of these inquisitorial persecutions. For their personal safety it is essential to know whether actual overt evidence should not be adduced of an attempt at military organization, before they can be deprived of their liberty and defeated in their prospects by arrest on the suspicion of an intention" to violate the Neutrality Laws. This is what I desired to know and to this I could obtain no answer from the United States Authorities.

I never entered upon such an extravagant flight of fancy as to dream that this Administration would protect American citizens outside the limits of the United States, as other strong nations protect their subjects on foreign soil. Many times have their lives been sacrificed, their property plundered, and the free passage of American trade and travel resisted on the Isthmus; but no one has heard of any redress of these flagrant injuries, to what you term suppressed, but which the sufferers felt to be real American interests in Nicaragua.

I only presumed to hope that, on due application, the proper authorities would condescend to satisfy us as to what degree of freedom on our own soil remains to us under the present Government construction of the neutrality laws. We did not require to be informed of their existence, nor of our obligations to respect them; but considering their immense susceptibility of constructive expansion and contradiction, we were anxious to learn what class of acts would be treated as a violation of those laws, or whether the mere "suspicion of an intention," without any act at all, will be sufficient cause for the arrest and detention of persons departing from the United States in the legitimate pursuit of their interests in Nicaragua, and to this I again say we can obtain no answer.

Very respectfully, your ob't. servant,

WILLIAM L. CAZNEAU.

Affairs in Boston.

GENERAL STAGNATION EXCEPT IN THE WEATHER—THE LEGISLATIVE CAUCUS—PROSPECT OF HARMONY—MR. SUMNER'S PORTRAIT, BY WIGHT—THE TRIAL OF TUCKERMAN—THE U. S. DISTRICT-ATTORNEY IN THE LENDRUM CASES.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 24, 1856.

Affairs have been pacing so sedately along in this neighborhood, that really no material has accumulated within a fortnight for constructing a sizable letter. The weather, to be sure, has been refractory, and a meteorological column might have been written on its antics, one day liquefying the roads to the consistency of Western prairie mud, the next congealing them with the rigidity of a Scandinavian hail. Since 1836, colder days have not been experienced in December.

The Legislature, or rather the General Court, for that traditional expression always pleases me, does not meet till the first Wednesday in January, the 7th, but mischievous people are already at work to bring Republicans and Americans to loggerheads. There will be but one caucus to perfect the arrangements preliminary to, organizing the House, the call for which will be broad enough to admit all supporters of Mr. Fremont. There is probably a clear majority in both branches of pure Republicans. Twenty-six of the forty Senators were certainly nominated as such. No list of the House has been printed or prepared, distinguishing between the Republican and American predilections of its members, and it is very likely that the usual five months' session may expire without introducing any test to discriminate goats from sheep.

Even the question on the constitutional amendments passed last Winter, and requiring the sanction of another two-thirds vote in the Legislature before submission to the people, which place persons of foreign birth under severe disabilities, may be managed so as not to cause a breach. Those alarmists who quake at every rustle of Gov. Gardner's coattails, and ridiculously over-estimate his importance, putting as ingenious constructions on all his actions as were imposed by "Sergeant Buzfuz" on the sayings and writings of "Mr. Pickwick," have ceased discussing the Senatorial question, convinced at last, of what was from the first self-evident, that Mr. Sumner will be almost unanimously returned.

Wight, the same artist who executed an ordinary portrait of Hawkolds, in Berlin, some Winters ago, which has been on exhibition in this city, and of which there is an excellent engraving, is painting Mr. Sumner. He is represented sitting, with the usual background of columns, curtain and landscape. When I last saw the picture, a week since, the resemblance was good, but the entire figure and the face needed filling out. Mr. Sumner has not attenuated. The severe and regular exercise which he takes daily, although exhausting for the moment, has had an invigorating effect upon his system.

The trial of Tuckerman, late the Treasurer of the Eastern Railroad, is going on in the Municipal Court, before Judge Abbot. It is very rarely that the purlieus of a criminal court-room have been thronged with such a number of our most respectable citizens as have gathered there daily since the commencement of this case. Many of our most eminent business men are summoned as witnesses.

The United States District-Attorney, Mr. Hallett, has experienced a severe rebuke to-day, in the cases against Capt. Lendrum, of which I wrote you in my last letter. It having become a matter of general remark that he was pursuing a course apparently better designed to gratify personal malignity than to subserve public justice, the Jury have persistently disagreed on the last few indictments, and on coming in, to-day, one of their number rose and informed the Court as much. They were discharged from further consideration of the cases, and the Captain is allowed to resume command of the ship, and proceed on another voyage to the East Indies. The trials to be continued, if necessary, in the Autumn. All the indictments against Lendrum were quashed, save one, on the ground that the Jurors who had witnessed to points the officers of the ship, and a fine will certainly be the extent of the punishment which the Court will impose.

RUSSIAN PREPARATIONS TO SUPPRESS PERSIA ACQUIRING SUPREMACY.

The Canada's mails from Halifax, reached Quebec about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. Our special files are to the 13th inst., two days later than those received by the Arabia.

Further investigation has been made into the case alleged to have been committed upon the Grand Northern Railway Company of Canada by Barry, Read and Storey. The defendants are now not expected to be arrested again, etc.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says:

"The despatch of the Emperor of Russia to the King of Naples was a little late. The main fact is officially announced. Some suspect that the hand of the Police may be detected in the affair."

The Paris Débats says: "We believe we are able to state with some certainty that Russia will not accept the Conference, definitely declared, but will submit to the decision of the majority, whatever that decision may be. The relative position of the Powers remains the same on the other side, England, Austria, and Turkey on the one hand, France, Sardinia, etc., on the other. Prussia, Russia, and Germany, as a matter of course, will not depart from the opinion expressed by France, as now, it is a matter of conformity to the law."

We read in the Paris correspondence of the London Times: "When it was first suggested, very many, the timidity of Count, that the Congress, in a modified form, would resume its sittings in Paris, to decide upon the points in discussion between Russia and the Allies, it was confidently asserted that the French Government had distinctly adopted the views of England and refused either to summon or even to encourage desires to maintain the conference longer. Since then, however, the writers of both the French and Belgian press, who are believed to receive the inspiration of the French Foreign Office, have modified their declarations; that France still maintains many original views, and still admits the justice of the claims of Russia."

A long document, addressed by the Russian Government at the latter end of October to all the Powers that signed the treaty of Paris, has just come to light. It was accompanied by a circular, requesting the reconvocation of the Paris Conference. This memorandum is an expose of the steps taken by the Cabinet of St. Petersburg with a view to the Fulfillment of the articles 16 and 11 of the treaty of the 30th of March. As regards the 16th of the treaty, the Russian Government says:

"It will suffice to read carefully the text of the stipulations to be convinced that they refer to a reconstruction on the main land, and do not apply to the possession of an island situate in the open sea. In fact, no express stipulation of the treaty has either annexed to Wallachia or subjected to Turkey that island, which was incontestably in the possession of Russia before the rupture."

As regards the Bessarabian frontier question, the memorandum states that the line of demarcation was drawn to the south of Bolgrad from a conciliatory desire on the part of the Congress to permit Russia to retain a town which had in fact become the capital of the Bolgarian district; that this step completed the drawing the line was not a Russian but a French one, so that there could have been no question of the intentional cession of deserts; and that, if the line were to be drawn to the south of Tuleli, the treaty of Paris would not be carried out conformably to the idea which presided over the transaction.

All the correspondents from Naples concur in stating that the insurrection in Sicily has been suppressed, and that the chief of the insurgents, Baron Bentivegna, has been executed. "Palermo is tranquil," says one, too, we are told, is tranquil; notwithstanding the clandestine landing of a quantity of cannon on the coast." Naples, however, in consequence of the abortive attempt on the life of the King, was much agitated, and large bodies of troops occupied the streets. There was a rumor of a revolutionary movement in the Neapolitan provinces.

We read in the Liverpool Mercury:

"The Arctic discovery ship Fox, which is daily expected at Portsmouth from New-York, and, in the event of unfavorable weather, will reach her in the latter harbor, is the United States, the Town Council of Portsmouth has resolved that a public banquet should be given to the officers of the American ship who are in charge of the vessel."

A telegraphic dispatch from St. Petersburg, dated Dec. 8, says: "30,000 Russians, commanded by General Bebrikoff, are ready to march upon the frontiers of Persia on the first call of the Shah. Besides which two complete corps d'armée are ready to march for the Austrian frontiers."

Advices from Constantinople of the 6th inst., state that France endeavors to persuade Persia to yield to England, and that Persian Bay has conferred with Lord Redcliffe.

The Late Heavy Gales on the British Coast—Accident to the America—Wrecks of Several American Vessels.

From the Liverpool Mercury, Dec. 12.

The accounts received on Wednesday, and the preceding day, from all parts of the coast, furnish a sad list of wrecks and other casualties during the late heavy gales. They set in early on Saturday morning, and, with the exception of a few intervals, continued during the week, at times with very great severity. In the more western portion of the English Channel, on Monday and Tuesday, a terrific gale raged from the S. S. W., with a tremendous sea. Towards evening of the latter day it increased to a hurricane, the sea making a complete breach over the Admiral Mole, in the vicinity of Plymouth. Several fine barks, namely the Columbus, Captain Hayes, was driven ashore at St. Mawes Castle, and became a total loss. Another fine vessel appears to have been experienced with the same fate, and 4 more dismasted in the vicinity of Portland; at Charlestown, on Tuesday afternoon, a British bark, laden with timber, was carried ashore by the gale, and, it is feared, that 3 or 4 of the crew perished. The vessel, it appears, had been some time ill, and a few hours after she had been landed. The ship was from Arendal, and her name could not be ascertained. The Welsh coast suffered severely from the storm. The fatal wreck of the London Merchant, Capt. Richardson, from Malta to Cardiff, and the loss of the master, mate, and seven of the seamen, on the Merlese Sand, near Milford, have already been briefly stated. The wreck of a schooner was passed some 11 or 14 miles to the southward of Tuskar, and it is feared the crew have perished. The Irish packets returning from Liverpool, Cork and Pembroke had most fearful passages. The Prince, from Milford to Cork, had a narrow escape. She was driven some distance up the Channel, and having run short of coal, was compelled to put into Swansea, taking 100 head of swine, so as to keep up steam and enable the ship's being kept head to sea, to weather on the Cork coast. She at length reached Cork, but not without having with a large number of head of cattle on board. The Carbineer, from Dublin to Liverpool, with the Chester, in ballast, for Dundalk, were driven on shore on the night of the gale. A collision took place between the brig Rocket Queen, bound to London from Aberdeen, with the Chester, schooner, belonging to Hamelton, being some 100 miles west of Scilly. It is feared that the Chester went down, and that two only of the crew were preserved.

The gales were very severe in their consequences on the northeast coast. Several vessels were driven on all the rocks at Redcar. Amongst them were the Fox-Not schooner, from Dunkirk; Sir Henry, from the Humber; John and Ellen, from London; Betsy, of Yarmouth; the sloop Steady, from Scarborough; and the French schooner Augustine. The two latter sunk, and the crews were happily saved. At the mouth of the Tyne the Earl Talbot, from London, and the Fyne Briton, were driven on the rocks.

THE ACCIDENT TO THE STEAMSHIP AMERICA—4 OF SEVERAL OF THE CREW INJURED—DAMAGES TO THE SHIP, ETC.

Yesterday morning, the British and North American Royal Mail steamship America, returned to this port in a disabled state, having encountered a severe gale in the Channel. The America sailed from this Harney on Saturday last, with a large number of passengers and the usual mails, for Boston. After leaving the port she met with very severe weather, but continued her course without interruption until the morning of Tuesday last, the 9th inst., when she was in position about 50 miles west of Cape Clear. While in the position she was struck by a tremendous sea that was raging at the time with terrific violence. The waves were completely mountains, and sometimes the vessel appeared to be literally buried in the foam. The shock, as heard, was especially severe, and was felt throughout the vessel. The bulwarks were carried away, as well as three boats. The steerage passengers were placed in a state of great consternation, and the cabin passengers were greatly alarmed. The saloon was also much damaged, a great portion of the furniture being destroyed, and the fine saloon carpet entirely ruined. The vessel contained other damage, although of minor importance. One of the crew was badly injured, having received a compound fracture of both the legs. Other parts of the men were more or less bruised, but not seriously. The shock was so great as to knock the furniture about in all directions, to the great consternation of the passengers, some of whom sustained slight bruises. It is said that five seamen were washed off the vessel by the sea, but most luckily they drifted back by a receding wave, only one, the man previously referred to, receiving any serious injury. Captain Leitch maintained the utmost coolness and self-possession during the trying scene. Finding the vessel in such a disabled condition, he had no alternative but to put her about, in order to save the ship and passengers. This being done, he steered direct for this port, where he arrived at an early hour yesterday morning. The America now lies in the Hud-
